THE MODERN NEED OF THE ANCIENT SUCCAH

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

There are great multitudes today, particularly among the Jewries of the United States, who feel that the ancient Succoth festival has outlived its modern need and ought carefully to fold its tent and silently to slink into the limbo of forgotten forms and discarded rites. For, after all, they say, we are no longer husbandmen, and an ancient Palestinian harvest festival makes small appeal to us who dwell exclusively in cities and pursue solely the busy paths of industr and commerce. We are far too removed from the soil to be inspired by any such agricultural or pastoral feasts, whether they be our own or those of the people among whom we dwell. The frail tabernacle may be lovely to gaze upon, and its bounty may be delicious to consume, but is not the whole business out of harmony with our present modes and fashions of life?

Decidedly, it is. But that is the tragedy of our age, and it were better for us, in this regard at least, to retrace our steps a few paces and take to heart the profound teaching of the tabernacle. It preaches a message which our generation must heed or perish; it beckons us to a way of life which we must follow, or our civilization, like so many others of the past, will crumble and moulder into the dust.

For the Succoth festival is an ever recurring symbol which Israel, throughout the ages, despite ghetto and pogrom, poverty and thraldom, has labored to keep alive, entreating men to pause in their hectic pursuits and frenzied urban lives to behold the beauty of nature, to return, if only for a single week, a swift flowing day, even a fleeting hour, to the soil whence they arose, to the more simple life and the more homely existence wherein they were all perhaps possessed of a deeper joy. It is a summons to come into the Succah, to gaze out through its delicate branches upon the skies: the silvery moon and sparkling stars; and to realize that beyond the stench and filth, the tumult and terror of the city streets, there lies a realm of beauty and calm; an enchanted fairy land of loveliness to be discovered everywhere 'mid nature's majestic pageantry.

How vital indeed then is such a message for our day, in which we all are so "cribbed, cabinned and confined" within the hurly burly of metropolitan life. A penetrating critic of our contemporary age was Eugene O'Neil when he sadly lamented: "Cities are prisons in which men hide themselves from life." A protesting prophet was he when he passionately pleaded: "Out with you; out with you, into the woods, unto the hills." Just such an escape in wooded vale and verdant field is what we require today, that, like our fathers before us, we might pluck the more precious fruits of life, which, in our frantic existences, we pass so callously by.

What time is there today for a bit of meditation and dreaming and thought itself! "Es bildet sich ein Talent in der Stille," said Goethe, but what chance today to retreat into the remoter recesses of our own souls, as we scurry from task to task and bury ourselves in the roar and turmoil of this pathetic battle of egotisms we call business and society and efficient civilization wherein even the most spiritual of men find it utterly impossible to think clearly and deeply upon the multiplicity of complex problems which confront our modern day. What opportunity today to glean even that most precious fruitage of human existence — the rare joy of deep and devoted friendship? Few indeed are those hours today wherein some timid soul dares to venture out of its seclusion to impart to a sympathetic and understanding heart some inner trial or tribulation, some secret confidence or hungry longing, some doubt or woe; to share with bated breath its grievous burden and to grasp in fervent faith the helpful hand and heartening support; what chance today for such throbbing bliss as heart speaks unto heart, and soul communes with soul? What chance even for music, for poetry, for love—a jug of wine beneath the bough, a book of verse and thou——; what chance for romance and dreams, for all the glory and fancies of childhood, when we arose close to our true estate as men capable of dreaming dreams and beholding visions, bearing within our imaginative and childlike breasts the intimations of immortality, of a world beyond ourselves. All this, the most glorious, the richest and rarest gifts of life we have ruthlessly sloughed aside in our adulation of efficiency and haste.

How welcome, then, the soft and pleading voice of the Succah, bidding us to forsake the thronging thoroughfares and the jostling crowds, to flee far from the maddening marts and frantic hives of our daily grind, that we might return to nature, to the simpler joys which she suggests—solitude, friendship, beauty, love; to throw ourselves upon the good brown earth whence we all were born; to regain the charm of childhood, to recapture at least a spark of that flame of beauty which everywhere abounds and to find, as did our forbears, some bit of happiness beneath the blooming tree;

Beside the hill encircling brook that loiters to the sea—
Beside all twilight waters, beneath the noonday shades—
Beneath the dark cathedral pines, and through the tangled glades;
Where'er the pulsing beat of life goes surging through the sod,
To tell its tale of beauty; and to proclaim the living God.

Rittenberg-Godine

The marriage of Leba Iris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Godine, Souvenir Avenue, to Alfred Philip Rittenberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. Rittenberg, Vendome Avenue, took place Sunday, October 5, in the ballroom of the Windsor Hotel, Rabbi H. Abramowitz officiating. George Brewer played the wedding music. The bride was given away by her father. She wore a gown of ivory satin made on princess lines with long tight sleeves, the full skirt extending to form a train. Her veil of tulle fell beyond the hem of her train from a cap of rose point lace, the gift of the groom's mother, and was held in place by a semi-circle of orange blossoms. She carried a sheaf of calla lilies. Mrs. Samuel Phillips attended her sister as matron of honor, and wore a princess gown of mid-gold satin with slippers to match, a brown velvet hat and carried an arm bouquet of yellow and bronze mums. The bridesmaids, Misses Evelyn Kaufmann, Lillian Wilanski, Marion Cohen and Eileen Fineberg, were dressed alike in vellum satin, the long full skirts falling from fitted bodices with slippers and gloves to match and brown velvet hats similar to that of the matron of honor. Their chrysolite and marcasite pendants were the gifts of the groom, and they carried yellow and bronze mums. Aubrey Rittenberg attended his brother as best man and the ushers were Frank and Lionel Godine, brothers of the bride, Dr. Ben Benjamin, cousin of the groom, and Stanley Vineberg. The groom's gift to the ushers were pearl dress sets. Mrs. Godine, mother of the bride, wore brown Chantilly lace over peach satin, a brown velvet hat and carried Talisman roses. Mrs. Rittenberg, mother of the groom, wore sea green chiffon velvet with matching velvet hat and carried Ophelia roses. A reception followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Rittenberg left for Toronto and Winnipeg en route to Banff, Vancouver and Victoria. Mrs. Rittenberg wore a black and white tweed dress under a black coat trimmed with fox and matching hat, shoes and bag. Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. N. Raff, of Patterson, N.J.; W. A. McManus, of New Rochelle, N.Y.; Miss Pearl Eliasoph, of Jamaica, L.I.; Mrs. I. Bailey and daughter, Edna, and Mr. and Mrs. Jules Kramer, of New York.

WHY BE HASTY?

It is recorded of a certain rabbi that, as he got well along in years, he acquired the habit of thinking aloud when reading from the Bible. He was once reading from the 116th Psalm when he came to the verse: "I said in my haste all men are liars." His mind began to work, and he went on quite unconsciously but also quite audibly: "Indeed, David, and had you been living in this community you might have said it at your leisure."

STRONG HUMOR

Raphael, a New York merchant with a head on him, heard that the natives of a certain wild island in the South Seas had more gold than they knew what to do with, so he decided to help them out. He sailed to their island with a boatload of onions. The natives, who had never tasted onions, were delighted with them, and gave Raphael a shipload of gold for the tear-inducing bulbs.

Raphael's business rival was enraged when he heard of this stroke of genius, but decided that if the natives liked onions they would surely like garlic better. He therefore brought them a shipload of garlic, and true enough, they were delighted. When he asked for gold in return, they told him they wouldn't think of giving him anything so common, and insisted upon turning over to him their most prized possession—Raphael's shipload of onions!

A WISE SAYING

Moses Mendelssohn was once caught regaling himself on sweets in a manner more befitting a small boy than a philosopher. Someone said to him: "Rabbi, only fools are fond of sweets." The wise man smiled a cunning smile and replied: "My son, that is a saying made by the wise so that they may keep all the sweets for themselves."

Canadian Medical Association Health Service

THE GATEWAY OF THE BODY

The mouth is the gateway of the body. Our health and freedom from disease depend, in large measure, upon what passes between our lips.

Health is very closely related to nutrition, and proper nutrition, in turn, requires that a wide variety of foods, in proper proportions be eaten. It is obvious that the foods and fluids that the body requires for growth and repair, and to maintain the energy needed to keep the body functioning at its best, must pass through the gateway of the body.

Most of the germs of disease gain entrance into the body through this gateway. If the diseases which are caused by germs are to be prevented, then this gateway must be barred to them.

Food, drink and the toothbrush are the only things which should go into the mouth. Just as surely as we allow fingers, pencils, or other articles to pass the lips, we invite trouble. Such articles may be soiled, and, as a result, there is a real danger that they may carry disease germs into the body.

In our own interests, we should be careful with regard to what goes into our mouths. We should use only water that is pure, milk that is pasteurized, meat that has passed inspection, and foods that are sound and handled in a cleanly manner.

The gateway should be kept clean and this means healthy. Clean food and drink should pass into a clean mouth. The toothbrush should be used regularly, night and morning, and, if possible, after each meal. The most important time for using the toothbrush is at night, and we should never go to bed without having given our teeth a very thorough cleaning.

A dirty mouth means a diseased mouth. It means that food and drink are being mixed with undesirable material and swallowed. Disease in the mouth is very often responsible for trouble in other parts of the body.

If there are abnormal conditions present, such as diseased teeth or tonsils, they should be remedied. A regular visit to the dentist is advised because dental care will help to keep the mouth healthy, and will prevent the pain and expense of the dental treatment necessary when the teeth are neglected.

Keep the gateway of the body clean. Open it only to food, drink and the toothbrush. Close it tightly against those things which have no right to be in the mouth.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

TECHNIQUE

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Lifschitz was rifled late one night by a burglar. The latter was caught by the police the next day and lodged in jail. As soon as Lifschitz read the news in the paper he rushed down to the jail and breathlessly demanded that he be allowed to see the prisoner.

"Why do you want to see him?" asked the desk-sergeant.

"Well," answered Lifschitz, "if you must know—I want to find out how he managed to enter our house late at night without awakening my wife; I've been trying to do the same thing for six years."

LASALLE'S ANNUAL PICNIC

The fifth annual picnic and outing of the well known firm of Montreal retail shoe stores, F. X. LaSalle & Fils, was held recently at Lanorale, Que., at the summer residence of Mr. J. A. McCaughan, of J. A. McCaughan & Son, Ltd., Montreal. The employees, guests and friends of the LaSalle company left Montreal in trucks and automobiles.

After a splendid program of races and games, Mr. C. R. LaSalle, president, in a brief address, thanked Mr. and Mrs. McCaughan, on behalf of his employees, friends and guests, for the very cordial reception they had received every year at the hands of their hosts. Mr. LaSalle also complimented the committee in charge of arrangements for the manner in which the program had been carried out. After the speech-making, Mr. and Mrs. McCaughan were presented with a magnificent lamp stand. The president of the LaSalle Employees' Association, Mr. A. Davignon, also spoke for a few minutes. Congratulations were extended to Miss H. Morin, who in April, 1931, will complete 25 years in the employ of LaSalle stores. A celebration will be held at that time.

One of the interesting items on the program was the softball game between the travellers and the LaSalle employees. The latter won by a score of 14 to 8.

Among the guests at the annual outing were: Messrs. O. Bedard, A. A. Daoust, Aime Reeves, E. Lefebvre, A. LaGrange, A. DeGuise, L. Pinet, Geo. Fortin, R. Cote, P. Lefebvre, Leo Dubreuil, L. Mailloux and others.

Mr. John T. Tebbutt, Tebbutt Shoe & Leather Co. Ltd., Three Rivers, Que., is a member of the new board of harbor commissioners recently appointed in Three Rivers. Mr. Tebbutt is one of Canada's leading shoemen, and at the shoe manufacturers' convention held in Montreal last December was made president of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association.

After all, say what we will, the one supreme luxury of life is sympathetic companionship. Friendship is a comprehensive term, and to a considerable degree comprises those relations of friendly feeling which are given, which should be given, freely and widely, but which do not necessarily involve the element of companionship. One may give all good feeling and good wishes, and be quite willing to give occasional time to the individual whom, after all, for his own pleasure alone, purely as a personal matter, he would never long to see. Because it is only companionship that can be absolutely desired and longed for, and those who give it in any measure are comparatively few, and those who give it in perfect measure are still more rare.

New Mount Sinai Sanatorium Opened

Sunday afternoon, October 5, the dedication and inauguration of the new Mount Sinai Sanatorium, Prefontaine (St. Agathe), took place. Among the founders present were Rabbi H. Abramowitz, J. A. Jacobs, Ascher Pierce, Mark Workman, Michael Hirsch; the absentees, through death, were S. Wolsey, Sir Mortimer Davis and Moses Vineberg, Lazarus Cohen, Abraham Jacobs, Harris Kellert, J. Rothchild, B. Sommer, and H. L. Nathanson.

Federal government representatives were S. W. Jacobs, K.C., M.P., and L. E. Parent, M.P., mayor of St. Agathe; provincial government representatives, were Joseph Cohen, K.C., M.L.A., and Peter Bercovitch, K.C., M.L.A. Other special representatives included Allan Bronfman, J. Levinson, President of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies; A. H. Jassby, Louis Salomon, President of Mount Sinai Sanatorium, Rabbi Magnes, executive director of United Talmud Torahs, Rabbi Charles Bender, Horace Cohen, Michael Hirsch, Adolphe Gardner, Dr. R. E. Wodehouse, executive secretary of the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, Ottawa, Ald. Joseph Schubert, Ald. Louis Reubenstein, Abe, Samuel and Harry Bronfman.

An additional $100,000 is needed to cover a deficit incurred by initial expenditures. Joseph Cohen, K.C., M.L.A., representing Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Prime Minister of Quebec, said this further burden must be met by public subscription from citizens of the municipality.

Quoting a Hebraic proverb, Mr. Cohen voiced the wish that he could be in Premier Taschereau's position for but one-half hour. "Not for the glory of the position," he declared, "but for the privilege of saying, on behalf of the provincial Government, an additional grant would be forthcoming to maintain so deserving a non-sectarian institution." Failing the fulfilment of that wish, he said that he would be content to hold the position of provincial secretary for even a shorter period so that he could recommend the grant to the Cabinet as a first charge on the provincial funds, particularly as a deficit was incurred in the up-building of the hospital.

"Private contribution has always been the mainstay of our philanthropies," he continued, "and I know that funds will be available from this source in the future. At the same time, it would help materially to obtain an endowment for the institution which has for its aim the rehabilitation of the health of the province's citizens."

Mr. Cohen reviewed the services of the Bronfman family in philanthropic endeavors since their advent to the city of Montreal five years ago. Harry Bronfman was on the building committee of the Mount Sinai Sanatorium. He was presented with an illuminated address.

A. H. Jassby, Vice-President of Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of Montreal, spoke. Ascher Pierce contrasted the old institution with the new. J. A. Jacobs spoke.

L. E. Parent, M.P., mayor of Ste. Agathe, said that the building was a decided asset to their community.

Rabbi Magnes felicitated local Jewry upon their support of deserving philanthropies. Louis Salomon, President of Mount Sinai Sanatorium, announced that 100 beds were now available for the use of tubercular patients. He urged members of the community to assume the responsibility of keeping up individual beds. H. Wolofsky, was responsible for the outfitting of the dental department in the institution.

Perched on a lofty knoll, dwarfed by the surrounding hills, Mount Sinai Sanatorium is distinguishable by its light buff color. It consists of four storeys. Whereas the old hospital contained 60 beds, the new building houses 100 beds and has radio and electric attachments and equipment in every room.

Rev. Mr. Mitchell, of Ste. Agathe, presented the good wishes of the Christian community. Others present included Dr. M. H. Toker, Dr. L. Mendel, Dr. Norman Vineberg, Rev. Katzman, Rabbi Hirsch Cohen, J. Schaffran, Arthur Levin, David Kirsch, Dr. J. Rosenbaum, Dr. A. Bercovitch, Dr. A. E. Greenspon, Dr. A. O. Freedman, Dr. Ballon, Dr. Jack Feigenbaum, Dr. Mark Kauffman, Dr. A. P. Ship, and H. E. Herschorn, who was responsible for the arrangements.

The Kaleidescope of Life Seen Through a Mother's Eyes

By SARAH COLTON.

By arrangement with The American Hebrew. Copyright

"Peace! Mother, you are going to have peace! They do not shed tears, for they envy her, her peace. There they sit, her two daughters, Selma and Rosa, and Martin, her son. Untiring they wait for death. There is a glamourous quietude. Two hours past middnight. The low, monotonous ticking of the clock can be heard. There is a hushed and ominous suspense.

The Old Lady smiles. Her wig is slightly askew. Time and emotion have put lines in her face. Lines . . . like rivers branching out. Or you can almost trace a tree. A slender tree in Winter time. There are the branches, tapering out. She herself is like a tree. A tree battered and torn by wind and rain, and yet in the Springtime bearing brightness . . . leaves. Yes, in spite of the battering of Life, the Old Lady bears the brightness of understanding.

The Old Lady smiles and thinks: "Fools, fools!" One might think that you—Selma, Rosa and Martin — are dying. Like drowning fools you are reviewing your own lives. You are immersed in your troubles. You will learn, you fools . . .

Selma's hair was gray, though she was but thirty-five. She had married at seventeen. Married the handsomest boy in the town. The most talented boy. He was a writer. He was one of those who was some day going to write a masterpiece.

He loved children and they came in rapid succession. Five sweet-faced babies. But you cannot support babies on the masterpiece you are some day going to write. He soon found that hard work left no time for meditation. After all, he said, anybody can do crude labor, but not everybody can write a masterpiece. If anyone laughed at him he said, "Genius laughs last."

Selma believed in him. She loved him. Passionately. To her he was all that he thought he was. Gladly she had sat at her sewing machine and sewed for neighbors, while he meditated. But the long, long hours of sewing under a poor light soon undermined her health.

The family had had a conference. If Selma would leave her husband, they would support her. Drive her husband out, when she loved him so? Never! She almost drove her family from her home. She raved against this materialistic world which had no patience with genius. She did not understand her husband, she could not comprehend a single one of his actions, but she loved him. Believed in him.

It was hard to see the little ones go hungry, hard to see her husband struggle with his thoughts. . . .The money was dwindling away and she could no longer sew. Her eyes were always burning. They felt as if fire were scorching them, when her tears came. Debts. Debts. Debts. They must be paid! Someone suggested that she sell liquor. In desperation she began to do it. Illegal . . . . oh, what did it matter? Five mouths to feed, five pairs of shoes to buy. She put the wood "illegal" from her thoughts. She was the mere mother protecting her young. That morning her little home was raided. She offered to go to jail, but her husband wouldn't hear of it. "You, at least will think of something to do. You can support the children. And think, how opportune this is. At last I will have time for meditation. Seeing you and the children suffer was not too good for thinking. Away from you, I will really write my masterpiece."

Heartbroken she watched him led away. "Harry, Harry, my own beloved. . . ." Her cries could be heard throughout the street.

"Don't touch me!" she screamed. "You are hardly perfect yourself!"

"Money. Money. I must have money. I'll pawn Harry's coat. He won't need it for a long time. I'll buy him a new one later." She went through the pockets to see that no personal articles were left. Her fingers touched a small package. Pills. What did Harry need pills for? He wasn't sick. Vague suspicions assailed her. She ran to the corner drug store. "You are my friend, Mr. Pierce. Tell me . . . tell me. . . ." She held out the pills. He told her. She staggered from the store. She was soon called back by the errand boy. "You are wanted on the telephone." She, of course, was too poor to have a 'phone in the house. All calls came to the drug store.

It was Rosa calling her to come. "Mother is dying."

"Dying! How gladly I would welcome death!"

Rosa's face was round and young. She looked as if she had never had a care. She was proud of her face. It was her mask to the world. A mask that she took great pains always to have in perfect condition. No lines in that mask. Of course not!

Rosa had just left her husband. She had entreated him to come with her to her mother's death bed. But he had said he had an engagement.

Engagement! Do engagements matter today? Oh, Robert, Robert, can this be you? Is this the man I once adored? He smiled and pinched her cheek. "And you still do, dearest. Surely you love me." Confidently he said this. She wondered. Did she still love him? In spite of everything? She no longer knew what she felt.

"Please come. Let mother think that all is well between us. Seeing us together."

"I'm sorry, but I 'phoned Flo."

"God! Can this be a man? Is it not enough that you have this mistress of yours . . . must you flaunt her in my face?"

"I never lie," and nonchalantly he fixed his tie. "Is the color becoming?" he asked.

"You aren't a man. You are a beast," she screamed. Their children, hearing the mother cry out, ran into the room. "I hate to think that you are their father." Then, realizing that the children had heard these words, she sent them from the room. Above all, they must not know. What had she done? Why had she talked that way?

Her husband patted her arm. "Come, come. Let us be friends. I still like you. You are an admirable woman. I am young. Surely I must not stifle my desires. And, Rosa you cannot imagine how fascinating she is. So different. She actually doesn't care if nobody loves her. She doesn't beg for love (insinuatingly) and that is why she has so many loving her."

Was this her husband speaking? Why did it still amaze her to hear him talk that way? She had heard him laud the charms of the other woman for many months now. Yet she still shuddered when he mentioned her name.

She knew that he didn't mean to hurt her when he talked of this Flo. Oh, she knew him well enough for that. There was no spite in him. Just stupidity. Their fifteen years of marriage had accustomed him to confiding everything in her. To confide in her now, was the easiest thing to do. Habit. He couldn't go around boasting to his friends about his mistress. That was rather indelicate. Rosa understood. He was sure Rosa understood everything.

But Rosa thought: "Oh, to have death come with outstretched arms welcoming you!" So thought Rosa as she sat beside her mother, a half hour later.

Martin had loved Rebecca. That was in Russia . . . twenty-three years ago. Pale, serious Rebecca, who refused to encourage him with coquetries. She always had looked at him with her soul shining through her eyes. But that was all. No soft caress, her arm against his . . . Her shyness made her say that she disliked love-making. He loved her. They had been engaged since they were children.

He was eighteen . . . twenty-three years ago. His heart had cried for affection. He was an orphan. His loneliness cast a curtain over his eyes. A curtain when he was with Rebecca. Biddy saw to that.

Biddy did not trouble about the fact that Martin was promised to her sister. She took long walks in the woods with him. She smiled and danced and laughed, and so insinuated herself into his life.

One night he told Rebecca that he and Biddy meant to be married. With his words, the curtain was suddenly lifted, and terror smote him. His heart cried out: What is this? I love Rebecca yet I plan to marry Biddy. He held out his hand as if to plead: Pray, understand me. Please understand, for there is something there that I myself do not comprehend.

Rebecca smiled a forced, twisted smile. Her face was ashen, and her voice very low and resonant as she said, "May Biddy have all the happiness I had wished for myself." Then he wanted to take Rebecca in his arms and cry out, "You are mine, nothing else matters," but Biddy came and broke the spell with her loud laughter.

Then time passed, oh, so quickly. He remembered that at the wedding Biddy had stepped on his heart and crushed it into a thousand pieces. How foolish . . . . nay . . . that was a piece of glass she stepped on. So to America. Away from Rebecca. With Biddy . . .to what?

Biddy stayed at home the long hours that he was out in the snow with his pushcart. Biddy was at home with a Russian novel. Oh, he didn't expect her to push a cart, or to stand in the cold, but it would be nice if like the other wives she would bring him a hot glass of tea with lemon. No, it was too cold to go out. So Biddy said. Biddy was strong and healthy, but she found it too troublesome to cook and keep house. So out of his pitifully small earnings he had to pay a woman to cook and clean their single room.

"Such a darling, my husband. So good to me," and then the coquettish biting of his hand. Her perfect little teeth might have been thirty-two little swords. He felt the little swords cutting his heart.

Her demands were too great for his meagre earnings. But soon he thought of a wonderful plan. Everybody was poor in the neighborhood. In spite of poverty, they needed furnishings, clothing, many things. Why not let them pay for these purchases, little by little, instead of the whole sum at once. Charge them a small amount of interest for this privilege. The neighbors thought it a good idea. One didn't have to borrow money for a bed. One could hold one's head up, and pay a dollar a month, twenty-five cents a week. That was the beginning of his great installment business.

There was a beautiful home, a cook, a maid, a chauffeur. But an empty house. No children. Biddy said it would spoil her figure. She began to run around with young men. "That is the way it is in America. Women are free," she answered him. She spent huge sums of money on beauty treatments and on clothes.

One day, searching in the storeroom for a lost paper, he found a letter addressed to him, which bore a Russian post mark. Who had sent this? He opened it. It was from his mother-in-law. He had never seen this letter before. He read:

"My son. . . . It is hard for me to write this. I am a mother. To me, all my children should be loved equally well. But is it my fault, I wonder, if I understand one child better? Biddy is a fine girl. What more can I say, my son, for she is mine. But perhaps because she is far away, that my pity is for the one with me. Biddy lives outwardly. Rebecca lives within herself.

"Oh, how Rebecca loves you. No man is worthy of such a great love. Seven years have passed and she sits by the window and cries and cries. She is pale. Her hands tremble. She is getting old. Yes, her hair is streaked with gray. She has loved you always. Now, it is as if, when leaving her, you have taken away her strength, her desire to live.

"What is this that I ask of you? It is little. The doctor says she will pine away. She is that sort of person. I beseech you, as a mother . . . It will not hurt Biddy. I know Biddy well. Hurt her pride, yes, but never her heart. Send Rebecca a letter, just a few lines . . . . and your photograph. Keep this letter away from Biddy. She need not know. It would not hurt her, and perhaps it will bring my daughter back among the living. She is a corpse with a beating heart."

Why had he never seen this letter? Why? Why?

He bent his head and wished that he could cry. This living hell, with a woman who cared nothing for him. He stumbled down the stairs. Biddy met him. "Imagine. . a joke on me. We are to have a child."

And so had sixteen years passed away. Now Biddy had a companion for her dances and parties. Biddy was proud of the fact that their daughter could drink more than any of the girls: "She certainly can hold her liquor."

He noticed that his child was not looking well. He reprimanded her for her ways of living.

"I'm sick of everything, everything," she replied. "I've got to have money, a lot of money. I have to go away."

"Go away? Where to? Why?"

"Just want to go. Got to go. Please don't be so stupid."

"Stupid?"

The Enemy's Gates

by

RICHMOND BARRETT

Publication rights have been purchased from Boni and Liveright and the first installment will come to you in the next issue of the Review.

"The Enemy's Gates" is a rattling good story. Like the other stories which the Review has published serially, it is colorful and highly entertaining. The interest is so sustained that the lucky member of your family is the one who grabs the Review first. Don't promise to keep any installment for your dear friend and neighbor. Every one in your household will want to read every installment and even a dear friend should subscribe to the Review instead of looking over your shoulder as you read.

"The Enemy's Gate's is a thickly peopled novel with characters that live and are not soon forgotten. Its dialogue is faithful, its situations are authentic. This book chronicles the events in the brilliant Morgenthal family, aristocratic, cultured, shrewdly civilized, with the moral standards of Rome and Budapest, but not of New York City. Wealth and power and glamor belong to the Morgenthal family but in the Christian world they are Jews first and last. Their is intermarriage in this book and the presentation of other problems for thought and discussion.

If you are not already a subscriber to the Canadian Jewish Review become one with the introduction to you of "The Enemy's Gates." If or when you are a subscriber the new book will be a real treat.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what is cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

This column darts to the defense of herring with a haste as great as its reluctance to pronounce A.B.B. wrong. It is opposed to polemical discussion between the departments of this paper but, after all, right is right and no man may assail the gastronomic foundations of Litwack Judaism without notice from this column. Why, a book could be written on the power of herring to bind its adherents to the faith of their fathers! In a struggle with lobster it wins fins down and its strength against intermarriage and assimilation have never been properly computed. Through its odor and its frequent overlay of onions and vinegar, it has conditioned millions to the tenets of a noble religion. It might well be used as a sure test for death. A feather held to the nostrils of a man thought to be dead will not bring him back. If he is a good Litwack, a herring might, in case there is any hope at all. In the face of all this to recommend it, A.B.B. belittles herring in a way that bruises loyalty. Last week, speaking of the rabbis who must carry their mission into Australia, he says: "They are like the resourceful Litwaks, who being too poor to adorn their Sabbath board with fish, elevate herring to the level of fish and proceed to enjoy the substitute." Sir, no Litwak is poor. Just being a Litwak makes him rich. In the second place for herring to reach the level of any fish it would have to descend steeply. In the third place, herring is no substitute for anything on the earth or in the waters under the earth and never will be.

According to reports from Russia the synagogues were so crowded at Rosh Hashonah that all who wanted to could not find room. The anti-religious campaign of the Jewish Communists made no impression in spite of the fact that the non-Jewish Communist press also tried to work up enthusiasm for the anti-religious march. This is in keeping with Rabbi Ferdinand Isserman's statement on his return from Russia to the effect that there is no religious baiting in the sense that it has been described here and the synagogues are not closed, although the Government is officially anti-religious. Rabbi Isserman observed an irreconcilable cleavage in Russian Jewry between the radical youth and the Orthodox older generation which refuses to compromise. As a result strife and bitterness threaten the unity of the Jewish family. Rabbi Isserman found that the younger Jewish men in Russia are trying to solve their own complex economic problem and "will think about Zionism." He believes that Russia has a great future and that Jewish life, although undergoing changes, will not become extinct there. Instead, there is a greater future for Jews in Russia than for Jews in the other European countries. Russia, in its official fight against anti-Semitism, is ahead of the other countries of Europe. With official posters and government literature the country is branding anti-Semitism as reaction. There is much inter-marriage and assimilation there due to radically changed conditions but this is a temporary situation. If Judaism fails to survive in Russia it will be due to the fact that it failed to make terms with modern scientific knowledge, according to Rabbi Isserman. He was one of fifty Americans who affect public opinion who recently visited Russia to study conditions. His observations are of special interest because of his residence in Canada as head of Holy Blossom Synagogue in Toronto.

At least in the Reform synagogues of Canada it is no longer the mode to make children quiver with apprehension and to sit with heads and hearts bowed down under the accusing sound of the rabbi's voice on Yom Kippur. There, if children are reminded that they may have been remiss in the matter of respect and love toward their parents, it is at the same time suggested, out of fairness to the children, that they themselves may not be entirely at fault. If children are called on to be respectful toward their parents those parents are also called on to be respectful toward their children. One of the major, unforgivable sins which parents commit toward their children is that of exacted respect. Respect between parent and even a small child must be mutual. It is the natural accompaniment of square treatment between two individuals even though one is a child. Parents who are unjust toward their children in what seems trifles to the elders and who have to demand an artificial courtesy from their offspring have nothing to their credit but a husk. Nothing will infuriate or antagonize a child toward parent, school or synagogue more surely than the one-sided arrangement which demands of the child respect and ignores the claim of the child to full consideration for entity and personality. The parent is entitled only to such regard as he can command by nature of his character and disposition. Certainly he can not rule by divine right any more than kings can. For the synagogue to make this plain to parent and child at such an important time as Yom Kippur is a true service to all concerned. At Temple Emanu-El in Montreal Rabbi Harry J. Stern spoke to the little ones with the fairness, the tenderness and understanding which endears him to them. In Toronto the Yom Kippur day sermon of Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath at Holy Blossom Synagogue will be remembered for a long time for the truths he told. f.l.e.

From Our Contemporaries

The Milwaukee, Wisconsin Jewish Chronicle says:

"If Dr. Chaim Weizmann had uttered the words of his speech before the recent World Zionist Actions Committee in Berlin as much as ten years ago, the Zionist movement would not now be fighting for its very existence. The speech is said to have created a "sensation," but it was nothing of the sort. It was an anti-climax. Every Zionist with any brains at all knew long before Weizmann said it that "it is impossible to continue the talk about a Jewish State in Palestine." Also that "we cannot drive the Arabs out of Palestine," and that if the Jew wants to remain in Palestine, the most he can hope for is some sort of "bi-national" state in which the Arab will have an equal voice and equal authority. This isn't anything new. The responsible Zionist leaders knew it for years, but they feared to say so in plain terms lest "the phantom of a Jewish State" (we use Weizmann's own words) vanish from the dreams of their followers and thus retard the progress of the movement. They knew there was an Arab problem long before the massacres of last August, but they never intimated such a menacing possibility in their fervid oratory during Palestine fund campaigns. In fact they talked so beautifully about the "Jewish State" that the average Jew in this country may well have been anaesthetized into the conclusion that there was no such thing as an Arab in Palestine at all.

And now after hundreds of Jews have been killed and maimed and hundreds of thousands of dollars of property destroyed, Dr. Weizmann tells the Zionists that "it is necessary to change our mental outlook and to consider reality!" Reality. Isn't that what Dr. Judah L. Magnes was so bitterly condemned for suggesting? And isn't that what many a well meaning, sincere non-Zionist was called "Jewish traitor" for advocating? Realities, and not phantoms. Realities, and not impossible dreams. What's the good of a beautiful dream if it turns out to be a nightmare? The Zionist leaders thought it more advisable for "propaganda purposes" to ignore the brass tacks of Palestine reality and emphasize the value of nationalist dreams, believing sincerely that out of the dreams would come reality. But 150,000 Jews in Palestine with an investment estimated at some two hundred millions of dollars was no dream at all. That was a fact, but it wasn't considered at all, and the talk about "making Palestine as Jewish as England is English" (Weizmann's own words) went on louder and louder until the Arab got to believe it himself, and in his terror of being ousted from his soil, regarded the Jew who had brought so much of civilization to him as a menace.

And now hear Weizmann: "The aim of the Zionists is, not a Jewish State, but the creation of the material foundation for an autonomous and productive Jewish unit. Why should we debate about a Jewish State or a National Home? Let us better draw up a program for the colonization of 40,000 families in Palestine within the next ten years. We have submitted our program to the English government, but the carrying out of the program is up to the government. There is also a possibility of a gradual understanding with the Arabs. We must carry on our work Step by Step."

Isn't this exactly what the non-Zionist Jews of America who were interested in Palestine Upbuilding have been saying all along? Weizmann's statement can now be taken as a frank and honorable admission of the error of the uncompromising Herzlian Zionist position. It is never too late to make amends, of course. The Jewish position in Palestine is clear. The Facts are before us finally in all their stark reality. We know now that Palestine cannot become a Jewish State or even approach such a dream by mere hot speeches and extravagant propaganda. We know the actual Limitations of Palestine as a place of settlement for as many Jewish families as can be practically colonized there. The term "colonization" was once abhorent to the Zionist. They toyed with the mirage of "mass immigration." Weizmann now only hopes for 40,000 Jewish families in ten years. That's 4,000 a year. Even that may be economically improbable for the cost would be around $20,000,000 a year, but at least it furnishes some basis of computation. But the most important thing Weizmann said was "we must carry on our work Step by Step." And that's the only way the work in Palestine can continue, and it's the only way the overburdened Jews of the world can possibly supply the funds to keep it alive.

It is very interesting to note that after making his revolutionary statement, Dr. Weizmann offered his resignation as a challenge to his vociferous critics who have condemned him to the point of villification. Weizmann's resignation was Not accepted, and he is still the leader of the world Zionist movement. That is quite significant. Zionists are beginning to be practical."

The Philadelphia Jewish Exponent says:

"Leaders of Federation in this as in other cities have in recent years given serious thought to the problems touched upon by Rabbi Julian B. Feibelman in his Rosh Hashana sermon before the Keneseth Israel Congregation. As long ago as twenty-five or thirty years, when Jewish life in this country was beginning to take on a more definite form, it was felt that the interest of the entire community could be served better, more efficiently, more economically by pooling forces which when combined produce that intangible yet quite definite something called community solidarity and communal responsibility. Fashioning it more or less after the manner of the Kehillas of some of the older European Jewish communities the Federation idea has evolved. The desire to improve upon the purely charitable work — extending it by increasing the allotments and wherever possible by applying methods of rehabilitation — may have been the impelling motive which led to the formation of the Federation; in its ultimate form, however, it became all-inclusive.

Recognised throughout Jewish history as a communal responsibility not unlike Zedaka — charity — it was inevitable that the religious instruction of those children whose parents could not afford to pay for it should be included. The splendid service rendered by these agencies in the past quarter of century in the leading Jewish communities of America, Philadelphia included, more than justifies the wisdom of the founders. At no time, however, was it assumed that the Federation would serve as a leveler of ideas or of theories in Jewish life. Federation's strength lies in the comprehensive, all-embracing character of its platform, meeting the varied and various responsibilities which a large, diversified Jewish community must share. Nor does it avail any to pit one kind of community service against another. In Jewish life the spiritual requirements, especially of the growing generation, were never placed below the physical needs. The sages went out of their way to deplore the existence of costly houses of worship where the poor were not amply provided for; they sanctioned the selling of Sifre Torahs in order to feed the hungry and heal the sick. Under no condition, however, did they counsel the neglect of the religious instruction of the poor children in the community. To look after the children of the poor in a cultural and religious way "from them shall come forth learning" is an ad

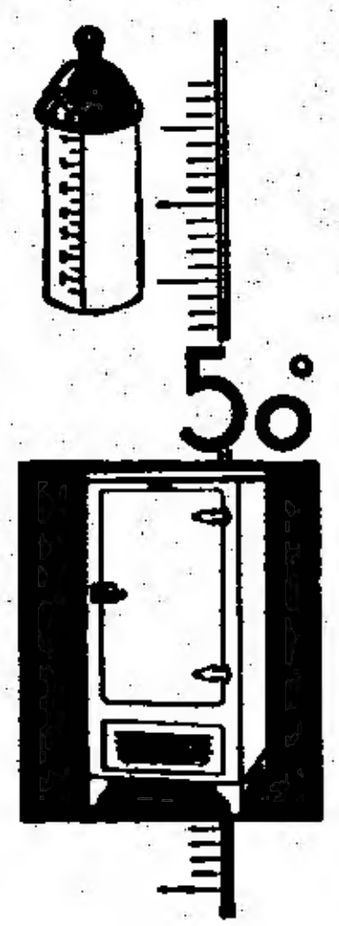
What about my bottle?

To him, it's simply his milk, that delicious drink that makes him feel blissfully at peace with the world. But to you, it's the health-building vitamines, calories and minerals that will carry him through babyhood.

What precautions do you take to safeguard his milk from ever-present bacteria? Bacteria in milk (it has been scientifically established) will multiply 150 times faster at 70 degrees than at 50 degrees. Below 50 degrees, milk and all other foods are safe from the inroads of contaminating bacteria. Is his milk kept below 50 degrees, the year 'round?



For a few pennies per day—less than you pay for bread and butter, the GAS REFRIGERATOR keeps foods safeguarded day and night below 50 degrees; provides all the ice cubes you want quickly; prepares any chilled dessert. In the Days of Father Abraham

(An Interview with Dr. Nelson Glueck)

By JUDITH I. STEIN

Modern man thinks nothing today of constructing skyscrapers — of building one floor on top of another until awe-inspiring heights are sometimes reached. Little did our forefathers of the time of Father Abraham, realize, when they were building their homes in Palestine some 2000 years before the Common Era, that they were laying the foundation for a sort of skyscraper which would not be completed until some 16 centuries later.

Such a "skyscraper" is Tell Beit-Mirsim. According to Dr. Nelson Glueck of the Hebrew Union College, this Tell has been aptly called "the hill of ten cities." Dr. Glueck has just returned from four months of archaeological work in Palestine. He was a member of the expedition at Tell Beit-Mirsim, headed by Dr. William F. Albright of Johns Hopkins University and Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle of Xenia, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary. There were ten men on the staff of the expedition, and 120 Arabian workers.

Evidences of historic value were unearthed recently by the archaeologists, who for three summers have been engaged in the task of penetrating the earth's surface at this particular point near the southern border of Palestine. Some of the latest discoveries could with comparative certitude be dated back to the time of Abraham.

During the past summer, in excavating one section of Tell Beit-Mirsim down to bed-rock, the archaeologists were able clearly to distinguish ten cities superimposed one upon the other, and carrying the history of the site from 2200 B.C.E. to 586 B.C.E. Altogether 14 levels were uncovered since several of the cities had been built upon more than one level.

Dr. Glueck explained some of the interesting technique of the work of the excavators.

"With extreme care," he said, "the site of the ancient cities was shaved down, layer after layer. At each level, very minute examination was made of every object uncovered, no matter how small. After photographic plates had been made, and every single feature clearly indicated on the architect's drawings, the debris was carried back, and work was begun on the layer beneath.

"Like the icing separating the layers of a huge cake, the ashes of the burned cities set off the various layers in distinguishable form.

"The dates of these different levels were determined by the well-known differences in the pottery used in different centuries. The dating of pottery has been developed into an exact science. It is now possible to assign pieces of pottery picked up on a site, to the stone, bronze or iron age, or to later periods.

"On one occasion during the past summer," said Dr. Glueck, "Dr. Albright and I examined two Tells and were able to ascertain from the pottery that they had been abandoned in 586 B.C.E. No more pottery was found after that date. The same is true of Tell Beit-Mirsim; no pottery was found there dating later than the 6th century, which is one of the reasons for saying definitely that the site was abandoned at that particular date."

Dr. Glueck explained that besides the pottery other materials were found on the sites of the first four cities, which were most extensively excavated, enabling the independent dating of those various levels. Many interesting inscriptions were found on jar handles. These inscriptions are important because they reveal the character of the ancient Hebrew script. A seal was discovered, similar to one discovered in the previous campaign, with this inscription—"To Eliakim, the servant of Jochan." Jochan is undoubtedly the shortened name of Jehoiachin, who ruled three months in 597.

"One of the most interesting finds of the past summer," said Dr. Glueck, "was a large, finely constructed room of a building which can be dated approximately to 1800 B.C.E., in other words, to the time of Abraham. The rest of the building to which this room belongs has not yet been uncovered.

With its thick, well-formed walls covered with plaster, its smooth plastered floors; its large door-socket wherein once swung a strong, heavy wooden door, and with its fireplace and stands for storage-jars, it can be assumed that this room was part of a house which belonged to a very wealthy and powerful individual, undoubtedly one of the noblemen of the town, if indeed, not its master.

"Another generation came along later and subdivided this room, by the erection of two walls, thus making three rooms out of it. This house was found in what is called the G. level. It was estimated that the last of the ten levels, the J., is dated approximately 2200 B.C.E.

"Two Israelitic cities were fairly extensively uncovered. The first lasted from 1200 to about 910. It was destroyed by the Egyptian King, Shishak. A year or two later the last Israelitic city was built and lasted until 586 when it was destroyed by the Babylonians. The former was a rather poor city. For the sake of protection, most of the grain pits were found inside the walls of the city.

"The last city, which enjoyed a long period of undisturbed peace, was an important and prosperous place of 5,000 population. Practically no grain pits were found inside the city walls. Four dye-plants revealed the industrial importance of the city, based on the weaving and dyeing of woolen garments. Astarte figurines were found in many homes.

"Below the Israelitic city was a Canaanitic city dating about 1500 to 1200. In this city were found some of the most interesting of the individual finds of the summer. Among them was the first stone monument of a crouching lion ever found in Palestine. In its immediate vicinity was found a libation bowl ornamented with the heads and bodies of a lioness and two cubs. These objects probably belonged to a Canaanitic temple which was destroyed by the Israelites when they captured the city.

"As is often the case with archaeological expeditions," Dr. Glueck said, in conclusion, "many of the most interesting and important finds are made during the last day or two of the campaign. The same was true this summer. This is, of course, always extremely gratifying and strongly intriguing. It is with much impatience that the excavator awaits the next campaign, when the task of solving the problems which the previous one has raised, may be undertaken, and the settling of the possibility of additional finds related to and suggested by those previously made, may be tackled."

CHUTZPAH

For two months young Avrum had been living as a guest with poor relatives. As the food supply became low the relatives were anxious that Avrum depart, and after much persuasion, he agreed. They arranged for him to take a train at dawn the next morning, and before the sun came up Avrum was awakened by the crowing of a rooster.

"Hurry, hurry," cried his relatives, "or you'll miss your train."

"Oh,' yawned Avrum, "I see you still have a rooster—so I'll stay for two more days."

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

SUCCOTH

Jews these days do not pay much attention to the Festival of Succoth. The reason for it is that this feast follows too soon the Great Holy Days, and Jews, at least in this part of the world seem to be getting too much Religion on Rosh Hashonah and Yom Kippur. Hence Succoth suffers unjustly. Succoth merits our interest. It is, primarily, "a feast of rejoicing." The heart of Judaism is joyous fervor and fervent joy. Of course centuries of persecution brought dejection into the psychic of the Jew. Oft, therefore, the services in the synagogue were characterized by chants, laments and elegies. But these, in reality, are foreign to the true Jewish spirit. Judaism in truth is a religion of joy — simchah. "And Ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days" is the biblical injunction pertaining to this festival of Succoth. In these days of pessimism — we especially need days of gladness and joy to lift us out of the valley of despair.

THE JEWISH HEART

A most stimulating article is to be found in the October issue of the Bnai Brith Magazine bearing the above title. It ought to be read and re-read by those Jews who are so frequently guilty of boasting about the "Yiddish Hertz." There was a "Jewish Heart" once upon a time and it existed in reality. Not so to-day. The author of this article writes as follows: "Eulogize the Jewish purse — but do not brag about the Jewish heart. The heart expresses itself not in pecuniary succor, but in personal service, and in that precious commodity—we Jews are woefully deficient. We establish splendid Jewish hospitals—but do we put our hearts in these humanitarian institutions? If our hearts were in them—we would dedicate our daughters to the noble profession of nursing and supply Jewish hospitals with Jewish nurses. We maintain a string of orphanages. If the Jewish heart would properly function, instead of sending these helpless children into cold institutions — we would take them into the warmth of our homes and our hearts, for there are enough Jewish childless homes to accommodate every Jewish homeless child. The trouble with us is that we, like parvenus, think we can buy everything with money.— If Judaism is not to degenerate into a shallow cult of convenience, we shall have to regard it not as a purchasable commodity, but as an influence that moves the heart to give ourselves in unselfish personal service."

THE NEW SANITORIUM

Now that the new building of the Mount Sinai Sanitorium has been dedicated—we ought to remind ourselves that fine buildings alone and cold cash alone do not make for a Jewish institution. Within the splendid walls of the new Mount Sinai we ought to bring an attitude of personal service. There ought to be frequent visits to the sick by the very men and women who speak and labor in the cause of Jewish philanthropy. Mighty walls and silver dollars only, will never warm the heart of him who suffers on the sick bed — who is stretched out on the sick couch hovering between life and death.
